Paper 2

British Depth Study:

Anglo-Saxon and Norman England
c.1060-88

Name ...............................

1
Anglo-Saxon and Norman England – Revision Checklist

How well do I know each topic?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Topic</th>
<th>Score</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>3</td>
<td>Anglo-Saxon England and the Norman Conquest</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>4</td>
<td>What was England like in Anglo-Saxon times?</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>8</td>
<td>Edward the Confessor’s last years</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11</td>
<td>1066 and the rival claimants for the throne</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>13</td>
<td>The Norman invasion</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>15</td>
<td>Topic Test – Theme 1: Anglo-Saxon England and the Norman Conquest</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>16</td>
<td>William I in Power: Securing the Kingdom, 1066-87</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>17</td>
<td>Establishing control</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>20</td>
<td>Anglo-Saxon resistance, 1068-71</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>22</td>
<td>The legacy of resistance to 1087</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>25</td>
<td>Revolt of the Earls, 1075</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27</td>
<td>Topic Test – Theme 2: Securing the Kingdom, 1066-87</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>29</td>
<td>Norman England, 1066-88</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>30</td>
<td>The feudal system</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>32</td>
<td>The Church</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>35</td>
<td>Norman government</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>37</td>
<td>Norman aristocracy</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>39</td>
<td>William I and his sons</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>41</td>
<td>Topic Test – Theme 3: Norman England, 1066-88</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Theme 1:

Anglo-Saxon England and the Norman Conquest, 1060-66
What was England like in Anglo-Saxon times?

- England had a population of about 2 million people (less than half of London today!)
- Almost everyone farmed land.
- England was a Christian country, and religion played a large role in everyday life.
- For centuries England had been under threat from the Vikings, and parts of northern England had Viking settlers.
- Edward the Confessor was king from 1042 to 1066, but the kings before him (Cnut and his two sons) had been Vikings.
- England had a very well-organised government.

The Social System

At the top of Anglo-Saxon society were the King and the elite aristocracy, and at the very bottom were slaves.

The king was the most powerful person in Anglo-Saxon England. His job was to protect his people from attack and make laws. Earls were the most important men after the king. The area of the country controlled by an earl was called an earldom. Thegns ("thanes") were local lords who lived in a manor house and held more than 5 hides of land. Thegns had a duty to provide men for the fyrd (army) when needed. Peasants made up most of the population. They worked for their local lord. Ceorls ("curls") were free to go and work for another lord if they wanted to, although they still had to do some work for their local lord as well. Slaves made up about 10% of the population, and were viewed more as property than people. Owning slaves was a normal part of life for the Anglo-Saxons, but the Normans thought it was cruel.
The Monarchy

Edward’s strengths

- A powerful king was one who had success in battle and led a strong army.
- Edward was not a warrior king himself, but his earls and thegns were a powerful military force.
- He was a respected lawmaker – someone who kept things peaceful.
- He was pious (very religious). Kings claimed to have a special link to God.

Edward the Confessor was king from 1042 to 1066. Every boy swore an oath to the king when they reached 12 years old. The king controlled law-making, money, land ownership, the military and taxation.

Limits to Edward’s power

- Half of the country, the Danelaw, still had strong Danish links from previous Viking invasions. These people wanted to live by their own laws and customs.
- The Earl of Wessex, Earl Godwin, was very powerful. He could put pressure on Edward to do things his way.
- Edward and Godwin fell out in 1050. Edward forced Godwin into exile, but he returned in 1051 with an army, and Edward gave him his earldom back to prevent a war.

Making up most of the population, these people were farmers and worked for their local lord.

Edward the Confessor

King

Earls

Thegns

Peasants

Ceorls

Slaves

These people were at the bottom of society. They were seen more as property than people.

This was the most powerful person in the country. He made laws and could raise an army.

These people were local lords, controlling the land in their area. They lived in the local manor house.

These were peasants who were free to move and work for another lord if they wished.

These were the most important men after the king. They competed for rewards from the king.

Government

The Witan

The Witan was a council of advisers to the king, made up of important people like earls and archbishops. It discussed threats and disputes, and had a large role in choosing a new king.

The king decided who was on the Witan and when it met. He did not have to follow its advice.
Earldoms

The earls were given many of the king’s powers in order to help run the country.

- They collected taxes. Earls kept a third of what they collected, so were very rich.
- They were in charge of justice and legal punishments in their earldom.
- They had great military power. Each earl had a group of highly-trained bodyguard soldiers called housecarls.

Earls depended on the support of the thegns in their earldom.

Local government

The country was divided into earldoms, controlled by an earl.

Each earldom was divided into shires, overseen by a shire reeve.

Each shire was divided into hundreds (equal to 100 hides in some areas).

Each hundred was divided into tithings (groups of 10 households).

A hide was a measurement of land equal to about 120 acres.

The fyrd was the army, made up of one man from every five hides.

The select fyrd was made up of well-equipped thegns and their followers. Their service was fixed at a period of 40 days, because they couldn’t leave their farms for too long.

Shire reeves carried out the king’s instructions in each shire.

They collected fines, enforced the law, provided men for the fyrd and maintained roads and defences.

They also collected the geld tax. This was a tax on land originally to pay off the Vikings.

The legal system

Justice was based on collective responsibility – if someone refused to join the fyrd, there would be consequences for the whole tithing.

Blood feuds were grudges between families which often lasted generations. If someone was killed, the victim’s family had the right to kill someone from the murderer’s family.

The Wergild system meant that instead of taking revenge, the victim’s family received compensation from the murderer’s family. A ceorl was worth 20 shillings, a thegn 1200 shillings and an earl or archbishop 3600 shillings.
The economy

England was well suited to growing crops, and likely traded wool and cloth too. The Anglo-Saxons traded with other countries (e.g. silver for coins came from Germany).

The biggest cities were London and York, and important towns included Norwich and Lincoln.

Each shire had a main town called a burh. These were well-fortified and linked by roads. The king’s laws said that more valuable trade had to take place in a burh, so that trade tax could be paid.

Villages consisted of a few houses scattered in the countryside. Houses were made of wood and straw. Lots of relatives lived together. Thegns also lived in the countryside, but their houses were bigger and better-built than peasant huts.

The Influence of the Church

- The English Church was organised into large areas controlled by bishops, who were rich, important people.
- Local priests were often quite ordinary people and not especially well-educated.
- Abbots and abbesses ran monasteries and nunneries, though the number of these was shrinking.
- Religion was an important part of everyday life because people worried about what would happen when they died. For example, Edward devoted time to rebuilding Westminster Cathedral.
Edward the Confessor’s Last Years

The Godwin Family

Earl Godwin had been made Earl of Wessex by King Cnut in 1018. Godwin helped Edward the Confessor become king, and Edward was married to Godwin’s daughter Edith.

!Family Tree

The Godwins’ strength would help England against any Viking invasion, but it also weakened the king’s power.

Why were the Godwins so powerful?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>LAND</th>
<th>LEADERSHIP</th>
<th>DEFENSIVE IMPORTANCE</th>
<th>POLITICAL LINKS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Godwins had lots of land, making them almost as rich as the king.</td>
<td>The Godwins were lords to many hundreds of thegns. This made them powerful war leaders.</td>
<td>Wessex was England’s defence zone attack against attacks from across the Channel. Harold also controlled the area around Hereford, often attacked by Wales.</td>
<td>Political marriages gave the Godwins power – e.g. Edith Godwin to King Edward, and Harold Godwinson to Edith of Mercia.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>MILITARY SUCCESS</th>
<th>CHURCH INFLUENCE</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Godwins’ only main rival by the 1060s was Aelfgar, Earl of Mercia, who teamed up with the Welsh king Llywelyn. After Aelfgar died in the early 1060s, Harold and Tostig swiftly defeated Llywelyn. Harold’s second wife was Llywelyn’s widow (who was also Aelfgar’s daughter!).</td>
<td>The Godwins convinced Edward to appoint bishops who were loyal to them.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Harold’s Embassy to Normandy

Harold Godwinson went to Normandy on a mission for the King (an embassy) in 1064.

What happened?
- Harold landed in Ponthieu, where Count Guy of Ponthieu took him prisoner.
- William of Normandy rescued Harold.
- Harold then spent time in Normandy, helping William in two military campaigns.
- Harold made an oath to William – possibly swearing to support William’s claim to the English throne.

Why is it significant?
- It shows that Harold was Edward’s trusted adviser, as it was clearly an important embassy.
- The Normans used it to boost William’s claim to the English throne.
- After Harold took over as king from Edward in 1066, the Normans used this embassy to portray Harold as an oath-breaker.

---

Which Godwin is each statement talking about?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Harold</th>
<th>Tostig</th>
<th>Gyrth</th>
<th>Leofwine</th>
<th>Edith</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Succeeded the elder Godwin as Earl of Wessex</td>
<td>✓</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Married to Edward the Confessor</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Defeated the Welsh king Llywelyn in 1063</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Went on an embassy for King Edward in 1064</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Earl of East Anglia</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Earl of Kent</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Earl of Northumbria</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

The Rising Against Earl Tostig

In 1065 there was an uprising against Tostig, the Earl of Northumbria. It was led by important Northumbrian thegns.

The rebels invited Morcar, brother of the Earl of Mercia, to be their earl. Harold Godwinson’s second wife was Morcar’s sister, Edith of Mercia. Harold was given large amounts of land in Mercia.

By November 1065 Tostig was exiled.
Edward was old and ill by this point, and Harold wanted to be king. By getting rid of his brother, he removed a potential rival for the throne.

Edward the Confessor’s Death

Edward died on the 5th of January 1066. He had no children, which meant there was a succession crisis.

The Bayeux Tapestry shows Edward on his deathbed, holding out his hand to Harold.

The Witan met quickly and Harold was crowned the same day as Edward’s burial, 6th January 1066.

In ______ there was an uprising against Tostig, the Earl of _________________. There were several reasons for this: Tostig had taxed his earldom heavily, people thought he abused his power, and he had failed to prevent an attack from ________________ in 1061. Tostig also clashed with Northumbria because he was a southerner, whereas they had strong ________________ links.

King ________________ ordered his earls to put down the rising, but this order wasn’t followed. The rebels invited ________________, brother of the Earl of Mercia, to be their new earl. Even Tostig’s brother ________________ agreed that he had pushed his people too far, and Tostig was exiled. The king died shortly after, in January ______, and triggered a ________________________.
1066 & the Rival Claimants for the Throne

Harold Godwinson
- Claim: Appointed by Edward on his deathbed. Family connection (brother-in-law). Proven military success and influence with the earls.
- Strength of claim:
  - Good – supported by witnesses (though ones loyal to him). Good chance of success.

William, Duke of Normandy
- Claim: An agreement supposedly made with King Edward in about 1051, and confirmed during Harold’s 1064 embassy.
- Strength of claim:
  - Backed by the Pope, but no real evidence. Good chance of success – the Normans were strong warriors.

Harald Hardrada
- Claim: Complicated – he had essentially inherited the claim from previous Viking kings.
- Strength of claim:
  - Weak, though the Danelaw may have welcomed a Viking king. The exiled Tostig went to Harald for support – together they had a strong army and fleet.

Edgar Aethling
- Claim: Royal blood – Edward’s nephew and natural heir (“Aethling” = prince of royal blood).
- Strength of claim:
  - Weak – he was a blood relation, but the Witan wanted a strong king to see off threats from Scandinavia and Normandy.

---

Harold’s Coronation and Reign

Harold was crowned quickly because the Witan feared an attack by William. He faced several challenges as king:

- Challenges from powerful earls - including old rival the Earl of Mercia
- The north – would they accept Tostig’s brother as their new king?
- Tostig – was looking for allies in Europe
- William – was reportedly getting ready to invade

Harold met with other Witan members at York, Northumbria’s main city, to get their support.

He positioned an army along the south coast, expecting an invasion attempt by William. They eventually stood down when the Norman invasion had still not come by September.

Tostig sailed to England in May 1066, but he was put off by Harold’s strong defences. A fight with the Mercians at Lincoln left him with only 12 ships.
The Battle of Gate Fulford – 20th September 1066

Harald Hardrada and Tostig attacked in September 1066. They were blocked just outside York by the new Earl of Northumbria Morcar and his brother Edwin (Earl of Mercia) at Gate Fulford.

The battle was a defeat for Morcar and Edwin. Their mistake was fighting just outside York, rather than within the city walls.

Harold heard about the invasion and marched north. He must have been confident that William would not attack the south any time soon.

The Battle of Stamford Bridge – 25th September 1066

Harold surprised Hardrada and Tostig at Stamford Bridge. Both Hardrada and Tostig were killed. Harold won because:

- The Vikings had left their armour on their ships
- He had the element of surprise
- Hardrada and Tostig had fought at Gate Fulford 5 days before
- The Vikings were (wrongly) under the impression that the English hated Harold
- Harold’s men broke the Viking shield wall

Were the battles significant?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>YES</th>
<th>HOWEVER...</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Harald and Tostig’s invasion distracted Harold from the south.</td>
<td>Harold had already stood down the southern fyrd anyway.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edwin and Morcar made strategic errors at Gate Fulford.</td>
<td>Harold expected they’d need help – he was already on his way north to help them before they were defeated.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Harold’s march south again made his troops less battle-ready than William’s.</td>
<td>Morale would have been high though – they had just won at Stamford Bridge.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>His Stamford Bridge success may have made Harold over-confident. He rushed to fight William.</td>
<td>Harold and the Witan had been preparing for a battle with William for months.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Edwin and Morcar were unable to fight with Harold at Hastings.</td>
<td>The only evidence for this is the fact they aren’t mentioned in sources on Hastings.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The Norman Invasion

After leaving York, Harold stopped in London for around 5 days to gather troops. He then continued south and met William at Senlac Hill, near Hastings.

- The battle began in Harold’s favour, but his strong shield wall gradually broke down.
- At one point a rumour went round that William had been killed, so he tipped his helmet to show he was still alive.
- Harold Godwinson and his brothers Gyrth and Leofwine held their position on the top of the hill. Eventually they were killed, but their housecarls fought on to the last.

Why did William win?

William’s tactics and leadership:
- William used cavalry to break up Harold’s shield wall.
- The Normans tricked the English into false security by pretending to retreat.
- William delayed his invasion until Harold had disbanded the southern fyrd.
- Horses were specially bred and shipped over for the battle.
- The Normans stole food and destroyed houses when they arrived in England.
- William quickly adapted an Iron Age fort at Hastings into a defensible castle.

Harold’s leadership and bad luck:
- Harold’s army had been out since May.
- He rushed south to fight William. He could have stayed in London.
- His men were poorly disciplined, which caused the shield wall to break up.
- He didn’t have the element of surprise.
- Harold’s men were tired after fighting up north and then marching back south.
- William sailed over during winter storms, so he was lucky to make it.
- The bad luck suffered by Harold could so easily have been William’s!
Both armies had specialist well-trained elite troops (knights and housecarls).

Norman Knights
- Charge at the enemy
- Mounted knights could strike downwards
- Well-trained on horseback
- Saddle held the rider firmly in place, meaning they could use their arms freely
- Horses vulnerable to attack
- More difficult to charge effectively uphill
- Cavalry and archers were only effective once the shield wall had been weakened

Anglo-Saxon Housecarls
- Shield wall was hard to break
- Heavy axes took down horses and caused severe injuries
- Housecarls were well-trained
- A strong shield wall needed discipline and endurance
- Once the shield wall was broken it was no longer effective

However, most fighters were ordinary soldiers. William’s foot soldiers were a mixture of Normans and hired soldiers from around Europe.

Harold’s ordinary soldiers were raised from the fyrd on his journey south. Many of the men levied to fight did not arrive in time and Harold went ahead without them.

Put the events of 1066 into the correct chronological order below.

- a. Harold crowned King of England
- b. Battle of Stamford Bridge
- c. Harold stands his southern troops down
- d. Death of Edward the Confessor
- e. Battle of Hastings
- f. Harold positions troops on the south coast
- g. Normans land at Pevensey Bay
- h. Battle of Gate Fulford
- i. Harold returns south
- j. Tostig sails to England, but is put off by Harold’s strong defences

1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10.

SUMMARY
- Everyone in Anglo-Saxon society had duties and obligations to someone higher up.
- Local government and justice was overseen by local people and officials.
- The powerful Godwin family had become the real power behind the throne.
- Harold Godwinson’s embassy to Normandy and the uprising against Earl Tostig had major consequences.
- When king Edward the Confessor died in 1066 it caused a succession crisis.
- Harold succeeded Edward, but there were 3 other claimants to the throne: William, Harald and Edgar.
- There were 3 major battles in 1066: Gate Fulford, Stamford Bridge and Hastings.
- Harald Hardrada and Tostig invaded northern England but were defeated.
- William defeated Harold at the Battle of Hastings, beginning the Norman Conquest.
Topic Test 1: Anglo Saxon England and the Norman Conquest

1. Who was king of England before Harold?

2. What was the key difference between a regular peasant and a ceorl?

3. In your own words, explain what the following mean:
   - Burh
   - Earl
   - The Witan
   - Succession crisis

4. Who were the four main claimants to the English throne in 1066?

5. Which family was the most powerful in England by the 1060s?

6. Name three of Harold Godwinson’s brothers.

7. Who did Harald Hardrada and Tostig defeat at Gate Fulford?

8. Who won at Stamford Bridge?

9. Name one tactic used by William at the Battle of Hastings.

10. Describe one piece of bad luck for Harold at the Battle of Hastings.
Theme 2:

William in Power: Securing the Kingdom, 1066-87
Establishing Control

The Submission of the Earls, 1066

What happened after Hastings?

The Witan elected Edgar Aethling as king.

William sent troops to seize Winchester and marched towards London. He needed control of the south coast to get supplies over from Normandy. The Normans forced people to submit by destroying homes and farms as they went.

However, William and many of his troops fell ill at Dover.

At Berkamstead (near London) Edgar, archbishops Ealdred and Stigand, Edwin and Morcar submitted to William. They swore an oath to obey him.

William was crowned on Christmas Day 1066. He swore an oath that he would rule England like the best Anglo-Saxon kings had, if the English would be loyal to him.

Rewarding Followers

Rewarding Anglo-Saxons
- William wanted a trouble-free takeover.
- Earls like Edwin and Morcar kept their earldoms.
- Archbishops like Ealdred (York) and Stigand (Canterbury) kept their positions.
- He promised that Edwin could marry his daughter.

Rewarding his own followers
- William had promised land and money to the people who had helped him invade.
  - He sent rich gifts to the pope and Church supporters in Normandy.
  - He introduced a heavy geld tax to raise money to pay mercenaries (fighters hired from other countries).
  - He gave land to family members and advisers. His half-brother, Odo, Bishop of Bayeux, was given all of Kent. Gospatric was made Earl of north Northumbria.
Establishing Control of the Borderlands

William wanted to make the border between England and Wales more secure. He established the Marcher earldoms – three new earldoms centred on Hereford, Shrewsbury and Chester. (March was an Anglo-Saxon term for border).

All three earldoms were given as rewards to people who had been loyal to William.

Earldom of Chester
Given to Hugh d’Avranches. His father had provided 60 ships for the invasion.

Earldom of Shrewsbury
Given to Roger Montgomery. He had governed Normandy while William was away.

Earldom of Hereford
Given to William FitzObern. He was William’s right-hand man in the invasion.

The Marcher earldoms were different to other earldoms:

- They were much smaller than other earldoms. This made them easier to control.
- The Marcher earls had special rights that usually only the king had, e.g. they could create towns and establish churches.
- The Marcher earls had almost full control of the legal system in their earldom.
- The Marcher earls did not have to pay tax on their lands.
- Marcher earls were free to build castles without applying to the king.

These features meant the king and earls could control the border areas and quickly put down any unrest. The special rights also attracted people from Normandy to come and settle the regions (colonisation).

After the Battle of Hastings, the Witan elected __________________ as king. The Normans ________________ houses and farms on their journey towards London, and the Anglo-Saxon nobles submitted to William at a place called _______________________. Though some important Anglo-Saxons got to keep their positions, William also gave lots of ______ to his own family and supporters as a ____________ for their loyalty. He created the ________________ earldoms in order to protect the border between England and Wales, and gave special privileges to their earls. These included control of the legal system, the freedom to build ____________, and not having to pay _____ on their land.
Building Castles

William built around 500 castles to establish his control around the country.

They were built in strategic places, such as near rivers or mountain passes. The Marcher earls built castles all along the English-Welsh border.

They were used as a base by the local lord and troops would be based inside.

Castles were different to the burhs (Anglo-Saxon fortified towns).

- Burhs were public, whereas castles were generally private.
- Castles were much smaller and easier to defend.
- Castles were much harder to burn down because they were protected by earthworks.
- Castles were designed to control people; burhs were meant to protect people.

Local people were made to build the castles, and in many cases houses would be demolished to make way for them.

Castles dominated the local skyline and were a symbol of Norman power.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>SALAD PIE</th>
<th>The strong wooden fence surrounding the castle.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>TETMO</td>
<td>The large earth mound on which the keep stood.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>PEEK</td>
<td>The strong wooden tower on top of the motte.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>LAYBIE</td>
<td>The enclosure below the motte, containing the barracks and stables for the troops.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>GOATEES UH</td>
<td>The building that controlled access to the castle.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>DRAB RED WIG</td>
<td>A wooden walkway over the ditch, which could be raised to prevent access to the castle.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Anglo-Saxon Resistance, 1068-71

The Revolt of Edwin and Morcar, 1068

William went back to Normandy in spring 1067. He took with him Edgar Aethling, Earl Edwin, Earl Morcar and Earl Waltheof.

When he came back in December, Norman control was under threat.

In 1068, Edwin and Morcar fled north and began a rebellion against William. They went north, where they were joined by others including Edgar, Waltheof and Gospatric.

Reasons for the revolt:

| Morcar’s anger: William had given parts of Morcar’s earldom (Northumbria) to other people. |
| Edwin’s anger: William had gone back on his promise that Edwin could marry his daughter, and had made Edwin’s earldom smaller. |
| William’s heavy geld tax was hated. |
| Castles were hated because they were a symbol of Norman control. |
| William gave away even more Anglo-Saxon land when he returned in 1067. |
| Odo of Bayeux and William FitzObern had seized land illegally. |

William and his forces headed north, building castles as they went. When William took control of Warwick, Edwin and Morcar surrendered.

- William pardoned Edwin and Morcar, but kept them as ‘guests’ at his court.
- Edgar and other rebels fled to Scotland, creating a new centre of resistance there.
- William’s strength would have convinced many that further revolt was useless.
- Edwin and Morcar may just have been testing William’s response – this would explain why they surrendered so quickly.

The Rebellions in the North, 1069

Robert Cumin

After being betrayed by Gospatric in the 1068 rebellion, William chose a new Earl of northern Northumbria: Robert Cumin. Cumin violently attacked towns and villages as he went north, and a group of angry Northumbrians retaliated by killing him in Durham.

The uprising in York

An uprising began in York in around February 1069, and Edgar Aethling came down from Scotland to join the rebels.
William put down the rebellion and Edgar escaped back to Scotland. William had a new castle built at York and put William FitzObern in charge of it. He then returned to Winchester for Easter – carrying out royal ceremonies was important for William to be seen as a ‘real’ king.

The Anglo-Danish attack on York

William’s control came under more pressure throughout 1069.

In September 1069, Edgar’s forces joined forces with a fleet sent by King Sweyn of Denmark. Together they attacked York, where they destroyed the castles and killed around 3000 Normans.

However, the rebels scattered when William arrived and the army split up. The Danes sailed to the swampy coastal area of Lincolnshire.

William tried hunting the rebels down but they were hard to attack. Meanwhile, more rebellions broke out in Devon, Chester and Shrewsbury.

William knew it was pointless to keep hunting the rebels; as soon as he dealt with one rebellion, another one flared up. Instead, he paid the Danes a large amount of money to leave.

He then began a campaign of destruction – the Harring of the North.

Hereward the Wake and Rebellion at Ely, 1070-71

The Danes returned in 1070, this time led by King Sweyn himself. He set up on the Isle of Ely, in the middle of the Fens.

Sweyn made alliances with locals, including Hereward the Wake, a thegn whose land had been given away to Normans. The Archbishop of nearby Peterborough had also been replaced by a Norman.

Hereward was fighting a guerrilla war against the Normans in the swampy fens.

Hereward and the Danes raided Peterborough Abbey to stop the Normans getting its riches – but the Danes made off back to Denmark with the treasure. Hereward was helped by Morcar, but William captured Ely - Hereward escaped, while Morcar was imprisoned.

The defeat at Ely marked the end of large-scale Anglo-Saxon rebellion.
The Legacy of Resistance to 1087

The Harrying of the North, 1069-70

After the attack on York in 1069, William began the Harrowing (devastation) of the North. This involved burning crops, killing livestock and destroying villages.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Event</th>
<th>How did William deal with it?</th>
<th>What happened to the rebels?</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The revolt of Edwin and Morcar, 1068</td>
<td>William headed north, building castles as he went. The rebels surrendered.</td>
<td>Edgar fled to Scotland. Edwin and Morcar were kept at William’s court, where he could keep an eye on them.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The uprising in York, 1069</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Anglo-Danish attack on York, 1069</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The rebellion at Ely, 1070-71</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

SHORT-TERM IMPACTS

- Around 100,000 people died and the region was totally devastated.
- People had no food or shelter. They starved or froze to death.
- Thousands of refugees fled the region.
- People resorted to cannibalism or selling themselves into slavery.

LONG-TERM IMPACTS

The Harrying of the North was intended to remove Northumbria as a threat for good.

- William’s troops salted the earth, so that nothing could grow again. This meant the area would be wasted for years to come. When the Domesday survey was produced in 1086, 60% of Yorkshire was still classed as waste, with no economic activity.
- Removing many Anglo-Danes from Northumbria reduced the threat of future Danish invasion.
- William now decided to replace Anglo-Saxon nobles, rather than win them over.
- William regretted the Harrying – he later gave money to the Church to make amends.
Changes in Landownership, 1066-87

Between 1066-1087, William replaced the Anglo-Saxon landholders with Normans. The rebellions had showed that he could not trust the Anglo-Saxon nobles.

By 1087, less than 5% of the land was held by Anglo-Saxon aristocrats. Only two of England’s tenants-in-chief were Anglo-Saxons. (Tenants-in-chief were the large landholders who held their land directly from the king.)

How did Anglo-Saxons lose their land?

- Forfeit - Landowners simply lost their land as a punishment. William took it and gave it to Normans instead.

- New earldoms - William made new earldoms, e.g. the Marcher earldoms, and gave them to his followers. They were created to defend trouble spots.

- Land grabs - This way was illegal – Normans either seized land, or took it through corrupt dealings which left Anglo-Saxons with less than before. Norman sheriffs were known for doing this.

After 1071 William combined blocks of territory to form large blocks, rather than earls having pieces of land all around the country.

William’s changes to landholding:

William made tenure (landholding) much less secure.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>ANGLO-SAXONS (pre-1071)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>There were 2 types of landholding. People had to pay tax on both types of land.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Bookland

Landholders were given a document by their lord to show their right to the land. This could be sold or passed on.

Leases

Land was loaned for a set amount of time, in exchange for money.

William (from 1071)

William made changes to land ownership:

- William now owned all the land. People only had tenure from the king.

- Anglo-Saxons had to pay William for the right to keep using their land. Norman followers did not.

- If a landholder died without an heir, the land went back to William.

- Heirs who inherited land had to pay a tax to William.

William enforced these rules strictly.
William’s tenants-in-chief, the new lords, now had power over the thegns:

- They could reallocate land when a thegn died.
- They could replace thegns who acted against them.

Thegns had to be obedient vassals and follow their new lord.

Peasants’ lives became harder, as the new tenants-in-chief wanted to get more money from their land. Ceorls (free peasants) became rarer.

All of these land changes made William’s power stronger, and resistance less likely.

Write a definition for each of these:

Harrowing of the North

Tenants-in-chief

Land forfeit

Military strength: He was a skilled warrior and defeated rebellions ruthlessly.

Journeys around England: He travelled around and met important families across the country. His power had to be visible to the whole country.

Oath-taking: He held oath-taking ceremonies, e.g. at Salisbury in 1086, where every landowner swore their loyalty.

Legitimate successor: He stressed his claim that Edward had promised him the throne. He wanted to be seen as the ‘rightful’ king.

Royal ceremonies: At his coronation he was anointed with sacred oil, and promised to keep Edward’s laws. He began a tradition of being seen wearing his crown 3 times a year.

Owning the land: All landowners were directly linked to the king. He could reward followers or punish rebels by giving/taking land.

Coinage and writs: His official royal seal was put on coins and official documents (writs).
The Revolt of the Earls, 1075

There was another revolt in 1075, but this time it included Normans rebelling against William, and Anglo-Saxons defending him.

Who was involved?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Ralph de Gael (NORMAN)</th>
<th>Roger de Breteuil (NORMAN)</th>
<th>Wltheof (SAXON)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>EARL OF EAST ANGLIA</td>
<td>EARL OF HEREFORD</td>
<td>EARL OF NORTHUMBRIA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Ralph’s father had been given land in East Anglia by William in 1066.</td>
<td>▪ The son of William FitzObern.</td>
<td>▪ Previously Earl of Northamptonshire, before being given Gospatic’s land in Northumbria in 1072.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ Ralph succeeded his father in around 1069.</td>
<td>▪ Succeeded his dad as Earl of Hereford in 1071.</td>
<td>▪ The son of Siward, who had been Earl of Northumbria before Tostig.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>▪ In 1075 he married Roger de Breteuil’s sister.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Reasons for revolt:

- Ralph de Gael
  - Loss of power and wealth. His landholdings had been made smaller than his father’s.

- Roger de Breteuil
  - Loss of authority and land. William had introduced his own sheriffs into the Marcher earldoms.

- Wltheof
  - Unclear – he may have played both sides, choosing to inform when the revolt’s success looked unlikely.

The leader of the revolt was Ralph de Gael. He plotted with Roger de Breteuil and Wltheof to overthrow William and split the country between them.

Reasons for the revolt

The men were angry about their loss of land, loss of privileges and loss of power.

William had been in Normandy since 1073, leaving Archbishop Lanfranc in charge of England. His absence gave the conspirators an ideal opportunity to rebel.

Planning the revolt

Ralph and Roger first discussed their plans with Wltheof at the wedding feast of Ralph and Emma (Roger’s sister). Lots of important earls and bishops were there.

Wltheof was the last surviving Anglo-Saxon earl and had good contacts with King Sweyn of Denmark. The men expected Danish support for their plan.
What went wrong?

1. Most Anglo-Saxons supported William.
2. Waltheof changed his mind and told Archbishop Lanfranc what was going on.
3. Lanfranc wrote to Roger, trying to convince him not to revolt. He threatened to excommunicate him (cut him off from the Church).
4. Lanfranc organised counter-measures. Norman and Anglo-Saxons worked together to prevent Roger and Ralph from breaking out of their earldoms.
5. By the time the Danish fleet finally arrived, William was back in England. The Danish leaders dared not fight him. They simply raided the east coast then went home.

The defeat of the revolt

- Ralph escaped to Brittany, while his wife Emma held out in Norwich castle.
- Roger was imprisoned for life (like Morcar).
- Waltheof fled abroad, then returned thinking he would be forgiven. William had him executed in 1076.

William then tried to attack Ralph’s castle in Brittany – however, he had to retreat because there was so much resistance.

The significance of the revolt

- Anglo-Saxons helped to stop the revolt – this suggests some Anglo-Saxons now supported William. However, the execution of Waltheof shows that William continued to come down hard on Anglo-Saxon rebels.
- The Danish threat seems to have shaken William. When there was another Danish invasion threat in 1085, he went to extreme measures to boost England’s defences.
- William now had to be careful of his own earls, who resented his power. From this point on, rebellion against William came from Normans.

Ralph de Gael

Earl of Northumbria, and the last remaining Anglo-Saxon earl. He was executed for his part in the revolt.

Roger de Breteuil

The leader of the revolt, who escaped to Brittany afterwards. The revolt was planned at his wedding feast.

Waltheof

The man left in charge of England while William was in Normandy. He tried to convince Roger not to revolt.

Archbishop Lanfranc

One of the Marcher earls, and the son of William FitzObern. He was imprisoned for life after the revolt.
 Topic Test 2: William in Power: Securing the Kingdom

1. Who did the Witan name as their king after Harold’s death?

2. Where did the earls submit to William?

3. Name 2 ways in which William rewarded his followers and supporters.

4. Name the 3 Marcher earldoms.

5. Name one way in which the Marcher earldoms were different to other earldoms.

6. Name 2 features of a Norman castle that made them difficult to attack.

7. What happened to Edwin and Morcar after their 1068 revolt?
8. How did William deal with the Anglo-Danish attack on York in 1069?

____________________________________________________________________________________

9. Describe what happened during the Harrying of the North.

____________________________________________________________________________________

10. Name 2 of the 3 ways in which William transferred land from Anglo-Saxons to Normans.

____________________________________________________________________________________

11. Name one change that William made to landholding after 1071.

____________________________________________________________________________________

12. Name 3 factors that allowed William to maintain control over England.

____________________________________________________________________________________

13. Name the 3 earls who plotted against William in 1075.

____________________________________________________________________________________

14. What happened to the 3 earls after the revolt was defeated?

____________________________________________________________________________________
Theme 3:

Norman England, 1066-88
The Feudal System

The feudal system was the system of landholding, and the duties and obligations that came with it.

William gave land to his tenants-in-chief, but they had to provide him troops when needed. Land with this obligation was called a fief (or feud).

Some landholders also had to provide knights. Knight service was for 40 days, and was unpaid – the tenant-in-chief had to provide money, weapons and equipment for them. Essentially, this ensured that William had troops without having to pay for them himself.

The king was the most powerful person in the feudal hierarchy, followed by the tenants-in-chief. Vassals were not as powerful, and answered to the tenants-in-chief.

Tenants-in-chief

Tenants-in-chief held their fiefs direct from the king. They were important people like barons, and some were Church leaders (e.g. bishops). They had several important roles:

- Military:
  - Expected to fight with the king and put down any local opposition.

- Social:
  - Provide knights for the king
  - Organise the transfer of landholding from Saxons to Normans
  - Provide courts in each barony (area of land held by a baron)

- Political:
  - Gave advice to the king, and food and shelter when he travelled around the country.

- Economy:
  - They gave the king a share of the revenue earned in their fief. They also kept a share themselves.
Knight service

There were probably around 6000 knights in Norman England. Their job was to guard their lord’s property, help defeat any threats and provide up to 40 days’ knight service when needed.

Knights were superior soldiers. They used cavalry charges and couched lances effectively against their enemies, and were often based in castles.

Knights replaced thegns as the under-tenants; the lords of the manor. They dealt with minor court cases in manorial courts.

Landholding

Under William, when a landholder died their heir did not automatically inherit the land. They had to prove their loyalty to William, and pay him to use the land. This payment was called a relief.

William could reward loyal followers with low reliefs, or threaten difficult landholders with high reliefs.

This was a new system, which even Normans hadn’t had before. It was designed to encourage loyalty to the king and reduce the power of potential challengers.

Homage

Landholders had to carry out a ceremony of homage to William. They promised on the Bible to remain loyal to him, saying “I become your man”.

Tenants-in-chief would perform similar ceremonies with their under-tenants.

Labour service

Labour service was the work that peasants did in return for using the land. It involved farm work (e.g. ploughing the lord’s fields) or providing produce.

Forfeiture

Forfeiture was the punishment for breaking the agreement between landholder and tenant. If the land-user didn’t provide the service required of them, they would forfeit their land or pay a fine.
The last Anglo-Saxon Archbishop of Canterbury was Stigand. He was replaced in 1070 by Lanfranc. There were some key differences between them:

- Stigand had been appointed because he was a close ally of Earl Godwin.
- Stigand didn’t have control over the Church outside his area.
- Stigand was a pluralist: he was bishop of 2 areas (Canterbury and Winchester) so he had more land and money. He was also accused of giving top jobs in return for money (simony).
- Lanfranc thought that appointment should be from God.
- Lanfranc was made the head of the Church in England.
- Lanfranc was against this: he thought the Church should stand above corruption and money.
Lanfranc’s Reforms

Lanfranc was an Italian monk who had run St. Stephen’s monastery in Normandy. He was heavily involved in changes to the Church.

- He wanted priests to live spiritual lives. He banned marriage and made celibacy (no sex) compulsory for priests.
- From 1076, priests were tried in special Church-only bishops’ courts.
- There were more monasteries – places dedicated to a spiritual life.
- Lanfranc introduced Norman guidelines for following and creating new laws.
- Anglo-Saxon cathedrals in rural locations were knocked down and rebuilt in market towns (e.g. Thetford to Norwich).
- There were more archdeacons (below bishops, but above priests). They looked after Church courts.

Within about 50 years, every English church and cathedral had been rebuilt in Norman style. Although most priests were still Anglo-Saxons, after 1070 there was only one Anglo-Saxon bishop left (Wulfstan of Worcester).

Normanisation

The Church was “Normanised”:
- Norman bishops and archdeacons influenced the messages people heard about the king and God.
- A quarter of all land was held by the Church. Putting Normans as bishops and archdeacons reduced the risk of Anglo-Saxon rebellions.
- Parish priests came under stricter control. They had to follow Norman procedures.

Normanisation of the Church strengthened William’s power in 3 ways:

- New bishops did homage to the king. Church leaders could forfeit their lands if they failed their duties.
- When a bishop died, William chose his successor. He also received the revenue from that land until the replacement bishop arrived.
- William controlled communication between the Church leaders and the pope. This stopped people obeying the pope over him.
Changes to Society

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CHANGES</th>
<th>CONTINUITY (STAYED THE SAME)</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>King</td>
<td>William built castles and cathedrals as a symbol of his power. He introduced the feudal system so that he had ultimate control over society.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nobles</td>
<td>The roles in the royal household (the king’s servants, troops, advisers) didn’t change; William just replaced Anglo-Saxons with Normans doing the same job.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Warriors</td>
<td>Just like Anglo-Saxon earls had sworn loyalty to Edward, tenants-in-chief had to pay homage to William.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peasants and slaves</td>
<td>The number of free peasants (ceorls) went down. Peasants came under more pressure because William wanted more revenue from the land. Normans thought slavery was wrong, and freed some slaves.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Economy</td>
<td>Day to day village life for most peasants was much the same as before – they still farmed for their lord.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

William stopped trade with Scandinavian countries (this especially impacted the Danelaw areas). Trade with Normandy increased. Large cities grew rapidly.
Norman Government

Changes to Government

The existing Anglo-Saxon government was more advanced than government in Normandy, so William kept and improved what worked.

- William centralised power so that he had total control. He owned all the land and no one was powerful enough to challenge him.

- The power of the earls was reduced, and some earldoms were phased out completely.

- William used regents (e.g. Lanfranc) to run either England or Normandy while he was away. He usually returned whenever there were signs of trouble.

Ways in which power was centralised:

- Knight service: troops loyal to the king
- William earned money through reliefs and the geld tax
- The Church was Normanised under Lanfranc
- The Domesday Book recorded how much areas were worth, and how much they should pay
- All land was owned by William
- Demesne: Land kept by William for himself
- The feudal system: all land users depended on the king

Sheriffs

The role of the sheriff (aka shire reeve) stayed mostly the same as in Anglo-Saxon times; William just replaced the Anglo-Saxons with Normans.

The key differences of Norman sheriffs were:

- Power
  - Norman sheriffs were more powerful than Anglo-Saxon sheriffs. They answered only to the king.

- Law
  - Some of the sheriffs’ legal responsibilities were taken over by baronial, manorial and Church courts.

- Defence
  - The sheriff’s military role now ran alongside knight service. Sheriffs looked after castles in their shire.

Sheriffs were often unpopular with local people:

- They were entitled to a share of the revenues they collected from their shire. This meant they could make themselves very rich.

- A lot of land-grabbing was done by sheriffs. Because of their power, people had nobody to complain to.
The Forest

William liked hunting and kept much more land as royal demesne than Edward had. Demesne was the land that the king kept for his own use.

He made new areas into forest – this was not necessarily covered in trees; it meant that it was protected land reserved for hunting.

Many landholders lost land to forest. Entire areas were turned into forest, such as the New Forest in southern England.

Reasons why the ‘forest’ was significant:

- It showed that the power of the king was above everything else.
- Extending the forest increased the amount of land William controlled directly.
- Taking areas for forest was basically land-grabbing – William doing this made land-grabbing by sheriffs and barons look more acceptable.
- There were harsh punishments for breaking forest laws, which showed how brutal Norman rule could be.
- William earned more money from the forests – from fines and the sale of hunting rights.

Write a definition for each of these:

Centralised power

_______________________________________________________

_______________________________________________________

Demesne

_______________________________________________________

_______________________________________________________

Forest

_______________________________________________________

_______________________________________________________
The Domesday Book

At Christmas 1085, William ordered a survey of England. He wanted to find out who held what land, what taxes they owed and whether they could pay more.

The results of the survey were written up in the Domesday Book in 1086.

The council that met to discuss the Domesday survey was called mainly to discuss a possible new Viking attack in 1085. The invasion never happened, but William took it seriously – he brought thousands of soldiers over from Normandy.

Norman Aristocracy

Culture

The Norman aristocrats (nobles/important people) liked to show off their power, wealth and superiority over the English.

- They built huge, more experimental cathedrals, churches and castles. Winchester Cathedral was the longest in Europe; Westminster had Europe’s biggest hall; the Tower of London was the largest stone keep in Europe.

- Male aristocrats shaved the backs of their heads. Spending time on your appearance showed you were rich because it was a luxury few could afford.

- They introduced a complicated ceremonial method of butchering animals they hunted. Hunting was their favourite leisure activity.
• They brought the culture of chivalry. This was a kind of moral code about looking up to knights, and treating your enemies in a certain way – William was merciful to enemies, putting them in prison rather than killing them.

• They were very religious. They believed in penance – everyone who fought against the English at Hastings had to atone for their sins by praying or giving money to the Church. Each man they wounded was 40 days’ penance.

• The Normans threw out many Anglo-Saxon saints’ relics and destroyed tombs. They thought they were superior to the Englishmen they had conquered.

• They introduced family names based on where they lived. They liked to pass estates onto a single heir, rather than giving pieces to different family members.

Language

William tried to learn English, but gave up because he didn’t have the time. Lanfranc also couldn’t speak English when he was appointed Archbishop of Canterbury in 1070.

All legal and Church documents were written in Latin. The Norman aristocracy spoke French though their children would probably speak both French and English.

Many Normans did not learn to read. Youngsters were often whipped when witnessing land grants to make sure they remembered the details.

English became a vernacular language – spoken only by the common people.

True or False?

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Statement</th>
<th>T</th>
<th>F</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>The Norman aristocrats generally thought they were better than the English.</td>
<td>T</td>
<td>F</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Norman aristocrats shaved their whole heads to symbolise their luxurious lifestyle.</td>
<td>T</td>
<td>F</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>The Normans were not very religious.</td>
<td>T</td>
<td>F</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Normans gave family names, named after the area they lived in.</td>
<td>T</td>
<td>F</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Important documents were written in French.</td>
<td>T</td>
<td>F</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Most Normans – including William – did not speak English.</td>
<td>T</td>
<td>F</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Bishop Odo of Bayeux

Odo was William’s half-brother. William had made him Bishop of Bayeux in 1049, and Odo helped William in his invasion of England.

He was rewarded with the earldom of Kent (forfeited from Leofwine Godwinson). He became the second largest landholder after the king.

Odo was co-regent of England (along with William FitzObern) while William was away in 1067.

Odo in trouble:

Odo got into trouble with William due to his corrupt behaviour. He seems to have had ambitions for power.

- The Domesday Book records many complaints against Odo for illegally taking land, including from the Church. Lanfranc complained to William and Odo was made to give land back in 1076.

- William sent Odo to deal with trouble in Northumberland in 1079. While he was there, Odo damaged the region, robbed people and took cathedral treasures.

- Odo tried to take some of William’s knights with him on a trip to Rome. This went against William’s power because knights were loyal to the king, not the personal troops of their tenant-in-chief.

In 1082, William had Odo put in prison. William was only persuaded to release him on his deathbed in 1087; he had freed other prisoners (e.g. Morcar) with much less persuasion.

William I and his Sons

Strong: He survived several assassination attempts when he was younger. By 1066 he had 10 years’ fighting experience.

Religious: He promoted Church reform and supposedly repented his sins on his deathbed.

Brutal: He put down rebellions harshly (e.g. Harrying of the North) and put his own half-brother (Odo) in prison.

Loved money: He wanted to own everything, and tried to get more revenue out of his land.

Husband: He was devoted to his wife Matilda, and wept for days when she died in 1083.
Relationship with his Son, Robert

William’s eldest child was Robert. He was given the mocking nickname Robert Curthose (‘short stockings’/’dumpy legs’), probably by William. They had a difficult relationship.

Robert’s revolt shows a common problem – princes who wanted power before their fathers were ready to let go of it.

In 1077, Robert started a fight with two of his younger brothers after they played a prank on him. He felt that William didn’t punish them enough, and tried to take control of his castle.

William wanted Robert and his supporters arrested. Robert fled and was taken in by King Philip of France. He began to launch raids from a castle in Normandy.

Unknown to William, Matilda was sending money to Robert. She explained to William that she was just looking after her son.

In 1079, Robert knocked William off his horse during battle. Robert gave his defenceless father his own horse and ordered him to retreat - William was humiliated.

William and Robert made up at Easter 1080, a reunion organised by Matilda. Robert was once again the chosen heir for Normandy.

William’s Death

People thought his death was full of bad omens:

- When he died, his panicked servants stole everything they could, leaving his stripped corpse on the floor.
- At his funeral, his fat corpse burst when it was being squeezed into the tomb. It caused a horrible smell which drove everyone out of the cathedral.

William had said that Robert should inherit Normandy, while William Rufus (his favourite son) should inherit England.

However, he was filled with guilt for his sins on his deathbed, and said he would let God choose the next king of England.

- Odo was William’s...
- William’s eldest son was...
- Matilda was William’s...
- Robert was heir to...
- William’s favourite son was...

William’s eldest child was Robert. He was given the mocking nickname Robert Curthose (’short stockings’/’dumpy legs’), probably by William. They had a difficult relationship.

Robert’s revolt shows a common problem – princes who wanted power before their fathers were ready to let go of it.

In 1077, Robert started a fight with two of his younger brothers after they played a prank on him. He felt that William didn’t punish them enough, and tried to take control of his castle.

William wanted Robert and his supporters arrested. Robert fled and was taken in by King Philip of France. He began to launch raids from a castle in Normandy.

Unknown to William, Matilda was sending money to Robert. She explained to William that she was just looking after her son.

In 1079, Robert knocked William off his horse during battle. Robert gave his defenceless father his own horse and ordered him to retreat - William was humiliated.

William and Robert made up at Easter 1080, a reunion organised by Matilda. Robert was once again the chosen heir for Normandy.

William’s Death

People thought his death was full of bad omens:

- When he died, his panicked servants stole everything they could, leaving his stripped corpse on the floor.
- At his funeral, his fat corpse burst when it was being squeezed into the tomb. It caused a horrible smell which drove everyone out of the cathedral.

William had said that Robert should inherit Normandy, while William Rufus (his favourite son) should inherit England.

However, he was filled with guilt for his sins on his deathbed, and said he would let God choose the next king of England.
William Rufus v. Robert and Odo

Lanfranc crowned William Rufus king William II in September 1087. But -

Odo – recently released from prison – started a rebellion against William II in 1088.
- Odo and many barons thought it made sense for the same person (Robert Curthose) to be in charge of both England and Normandy.
- Odo was joined by his brother Robert of Mortain (another Robert).
- Other smaller rebellions also broke out in places such as Norwich, Leicester and the Marcher earldoms.

However, most of the Norman aristocrats and English population were against the revolt. William Rufus caught both Odo and Robert of Mortain at Pevensey Castle, using local fyrd troops. Odo escaped to Rochester Castle, but eventually surrendered after Robert Curthose didn’t come to support him.

William was popular after Odo’s defeat, and made promises to overturn many of the hated parts of Norman rule (e.g. high taxes, the forest). However, he went back on all of them!

SUMMARY
- The Anglo-Saxon social system was replaced by William’s feudal system.
- The Church was reformed and “Normanised” under Archbishop Lanfranc.
- William kept many Anglo-Saxons elements, but centralised power so that he was the most powerful.
- The authority of the sheriff/shire reeve was strengthened.
- The Domesday Book recorded details of all tenants and landholders. This helped William to maintain his control of the country.
- Anglo-Saxon aristocratic culture was replaced by Norman aristocratic culture. Aristocrats now spoke French, while English became a vernacular (local/common) language.
- Odo, William’s half-brother, was untouchable until he began to challenge William’s power.
- William’s strong personality influenced the success of the Norman Conquest, but caused tensions with his sons, one of whom (Robert) rebelled against him.
- After William died in 1087, there was a dispute over who should succeed him. His son William Rufus successfully defeated a rebellion by Odo, and was supported by most of the population.

Topic Test 2: William in Power: Securing the Kingdom

1. What word describes land held in return for a service to someone higher up?

2. What was a relief?
3. What was knight service? How long was it for?

4. Who was the last Anglo-Saxon Archbishop of Canterbury?

5. Name two changes that Lanfranc made to the Church.

6. Name one way in which William centralised power.

7. Name one feature of the role of a Norman sheriff.

8. What was the demesne?

9. When was the Domesday Book produced?

10. What language replaced English for written documents?

11. Name 3 characteristics of William’s personality that helped the success of the Norman Conquest.

12. Which of William’s sons rebelled against him in 1077?

13. Which son succeeded William as king?

14. Who unsuccessfully rebelled against the new king in 1088?